- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Geetha Bollineni

Jonathan Barron Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gelilawit Woldeamanuel

Jonathan Esquivel

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Genard Garcia

Jonathan Hernandez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gene Mari

Jonathan Herrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Genesis Jauregui

Jonathan Lopezgarcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Georgina Hernandez

Jonathan Nguyensilva

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Georgina Vergara

Jonathan Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gerardo Cruz

Jonathan Vargas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gerardo Curiel

Jonathan Vargas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gerardo Diaz

Jong Kim

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Giang Loc

Jorge Argueta De Leon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Giesi Ramos

Jorge Casas Cuellar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gilbert Dewstone

Jorge Cuevassandoval

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gilbert Lopez

Jorge Martinez Moran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Giovanni Novoa Cortes

Jorge Ruano-Torres

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Giovanni Palmerin

Jose Abalos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Girmay Stifanos

Jose Amaral

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Giselle Garcia

Jose Amezcuarodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Glenn Rebugio

Jose Avalos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gloria Flores

Jose Balderas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gloria Rodriguez

Jose Benavidez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gloria Rodriguez

Jose Calvillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Goeun Han

Jose Castillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gonzalo Atayde

Jose Castrorobles

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gonzalo Maldonado

Jose Castrorobles

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Giovanni Guizar Jimenez

Jose Cortazar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Grace Gallardo

Jose Covarrubias

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Grace Lin

Jose Covarrubias

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Grace Rios

Jose Espinoza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Grace Sun

Jose Garcia Castaneda

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Graciela Garcia

Jose Herrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Grecia Solorzano

Jose Jimenez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gregorio Virgen

Jose Jimenezcorona

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Arzaterueda

Jose Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Cordova Ricardez

Jose Magana

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Gonzalez

Jose Martinez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Gonzalez

Jose Martinez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Iniguez

Jose Panlilio

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Rodriguez Apreza

Jose Penaloza Ortiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Rodriguezgarcia

Jose Ramires

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Valencia

Jose Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guadalupe Yanez

Jose Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gualberto Gutierrez Cisneros

Jose Real

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guillermina Alderete

Jose Rios Cortes

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guillermina Derico

Jose Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guillermo Carranza

Jose Ruiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guillermo Pacheco

Jose Salas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Guillermo Salas Ortiz

Jose Sanchez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gurdeep Sahota

Jose Sanchez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gurdeep Sodhi

Jose Santamariareyna

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gurpreet Kaur

Jose Santiago

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gurpreet Klar

Jose Servin

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gustavo Ayala

Jose Torres

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Gustavo Correa

Josefina Barragandesilva

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ha Bui

Josefina Manzo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hafta Desta

Josefina Torres Solorio

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hai Bui

Joseph Chang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Han Ly

Joseph Corona

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hang Le

Joseph Gonzalez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hanh Dang

Joseph Gonzalez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hanh Pham

Joseph Lei

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hannah Lopez

Joseph Ortiz Hernandez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hannah Pham

Joseph Pequero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hao Le

Joseph Pequero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Harish Muppalla

Joseph Pereira

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Harit Desai

Joseph Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Harold Trim

Joseph Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Harpreet Dhaliwal

Joseph Rastrullo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Harrison Le

Josephine Garza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Harsh Bhakta

Josephine Retita Ranum

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hector Borboa

Josephine Savedra

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hector Lopez

Joshua Carcamo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hector Rico

Joshua Espinoza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hector Torres

Joshua Martinez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hector Torres

Joshua Navarrette

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hector Torres

Joshua Sheng

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Heejin Choe

Joshua Spindel

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Heesun Jahng

Joshua White

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Heidy Huerta Sanchez

Josiah Berryhill

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Helen Nguyen

Joss Thomas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Helen Wong

Jtrinidad Sandoval

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Helianna Flores

Juan Betancourt

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hemalatha Raman

Juan Carmona

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hemant Jindal

Juan Castro

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Henry Campbell

Juan Cortez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Henry Tran

Juan Galomungia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Heriberto Romo

Juan Gonzalez-Gomez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Heriberto Vergara

Juan Guereca

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hermelinda Garcia

Juan Gutierrez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hermelinda Garcia Arellano

Juan Langarica

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Herminio Montes

Juan Lopezrodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Herpaul Tumber

Juan Moyado Ocampo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hien Hong

Juan Munguia Castillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hien Hong

Juan Noguezespinoza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hien Khuu

Juan Ortiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hien Pham

Juan Perez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hienock Habte

Juan Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hieu Phan

Juan Rivera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hieu Tran

Juan Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Higinio Cardenas Nava

Juan Rosales

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hing Yin Lai

Juan Rosas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hoaian Dang

Juan Salazar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hoang Nguyen

Juan Sandoval

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hoang Nguyen

Juan Saraviasanchez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hoang Nguyen

Juan Uribe

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hong Nguyen

Juan Vargas Hernandez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hong Sauveur

Juan Vidal

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hong Thach

Juana Jimenez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hong Tran

Juandiego Fierro

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hongseok Kim

Judy Chun

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hongyi Yang

Julia Brown

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Hubert Alejandro

Julia Cuevas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julia Ta

Maria Torres

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julian Canela

Maria Vasquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julian Chavarria

Maria Vazquez Campos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julianne Carrillo-Mathues

Maria Villarreal Galaviz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julie Pham

Maria Zeledon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julieta Castroleal

Mariabrigida Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Juliette Delacruz

Mariafrancisca Guillende Gutierrez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julio Coelloalva

Mariah Faith Tan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julio Doroteo Deloya Garcia

Mariah Gonzalez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Julissa Morales

Mariajose Garciamorones

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Justin Hong

Marian Fricano

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Justin Mark Perez

Mariana Gomez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Justin Pham

Mariana Gomez Guerrero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Justin Taylor

Maribel Rosas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Juvencio Perez-Ramirez

Maricela Vazquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Jyothi Kashi

Mariel Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kailana Negrete

Mariel Sanchez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kamalpreet Kaur

Mariela Ceron

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karely Ruvalcaba-Enriquez

Mariela Morales

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karely Ruvalcaba-Enriquez

Mariela Morales

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karen Huerta

Marilyn Pfefferlen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karen Huerta

Marilyn Turner

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karen Mariscal

Marilynn Smith

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karen Villa

Mario Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karla Cano Martinez

Mario Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karla Frausto

Mario Maldonado

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karla Guillermo

Mario Martinezhernandez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karla Jurado Magana

Mario Panuco

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karla Lopez

Mario Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karnail Singh

Marisela Horta

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Karthikeyan Samynathan

Marisela Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kassandra Carranza

Marisol Angulo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Katherine Arias

Marisol Angulo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kathy Huynh

Marissel Payva

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kathy Huynh

Maritza Murillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kathy Tran

Maritza Serrano Ramos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Katie Adams

Mark Bishop

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Katie Lopez

Mark Hernandez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Katrina Torres-Rodriguez

Mark Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Katrinna Davila

Marlena Roberts

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Katty Trevizo

Marlene Salazar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Katya Ceballos

Marta Martinez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kaylaalexa Ramos

Martha Anzures

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Keana Malolot

Martha Anzures

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Keith Wong

Martha Blas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kelly Lam

Martha Cervantes

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kelly Vu

Martha Jimenezperez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kelsey Sandoval

Martha Montes

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kendrick Tran

Martha Sanchez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kenneth Caluya

Martha Torres

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kenneth Green

Martin Morales

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kerry McLaughlin

Martins Bluzma

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Keven Urbina-Jaimez

Mary Bonifacio

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Bravo

Mary Cambron

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Feely

Mary Duran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Feely

Mary Duran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Hoang

Mary Glass

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Huynh

Mary Gonzales

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Jauregui

Mary Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Nguyen

Mary Rios

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Ruelas

Mashana Gadsden

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Ruelas

Mauricio Aguilar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Tao

Mauricio Isidrorosas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Tran

Maximino Cabrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kevin Zarate

Maxwell Arancon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Khai Tran

Maxwell Arancon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Khanghy Tran

Mayo Mendez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Khanh Nguyen

Mayra Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Khiet Chau

Mayra Monge

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Khoa Pham

Mayra Monge

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Khoa Truong

Mayra Rojas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ki Hong

Mayra Solorzano

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kiana Ponce

Mayra Tapia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kim Dinh

Meenakshi Mujoo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kimberley Mejia

Megan Hunt

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kimberly Espinoza

Megan Huynh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kimberly Espinoza Loya

Megha Manju

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kimhong Vo

Megha Manjunath

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kimvi Quach

Melanie Gavina

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kiriaki Gamez

Melanie Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kris Hu

Melat Mengistu

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Krishna Mohan

Melina Torres

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kristen Calderon

Melinda Canales

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kristen Oda

Melissa Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kristina Liu

Melissa Garcias

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kristina Liu

Melissa Leonsierra

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kristina Perez

Melissa Mendoza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kuldip Singh

Melissa Pagan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kyle Chau

Melizza Herrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Kyle Yun

Melizza Herrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lac Tran

Melva Munoz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lai Hoang

Melva Munoz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lam Dang

Mercy Vaca

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lam Hai Chau

Meri Solomon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lam Vo

Metti Haile

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lan Hy

Mi Kha

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lan Nguyen

Mia Flores

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lan Tran

Micah Johnson

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lanae Richardson

Michael Borbon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lance Ehrman

Michael Cahill

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Larenee Hill

Michael Delaney

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Larry Underwood

Michael Do

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Larry Xu

Michael Guzman

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lat Ngu

Michael Lerma

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Latrese Jackson

Michael May

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Laura Gomez

Michael Melo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Laura Munoz

Michael Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Laura Rodriguez

Michael Pilipina

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Laurelyn Bracamontes

Michael Shieh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lauren Ornelas

Michael Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Laurie Alaimo

Michael Yi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lavisha Yadav

Michele Gonzalez Guerra

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lawrence Gonzales

Michelle Alcantar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lawrence Verastegui

Michelle Gutierrez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lazaro Garcia

Michelle Gutierrez Reynosa

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Le Pham

Michelle Gutierrez Reynosa

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leanne Ho

Michelle Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leelo Rendon

Michelle Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leiannakitana Ramos

Michelle Tapia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leila Negrete

Mickey Lai

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leila Negrete

Miguel Avalos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leilani Castillo

Miguel Baraias Mendez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leobardo Marez

Miguel Cortez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leonardo Espinoza Zuniga

Miguel Flores Moran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lesley Barrita

Miguel Garcia Vazquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lesley Barrita

Miguel Gutierrez Castaneda

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leslie Gomez

Miguel Larios

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leslie Jimenez

Miguel Murillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lesly Garcia

Miguel MurilloGonzalez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leticia Bayona

Miguel Ortega

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leticia Chaidez

Miguel Osuna

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leticia Torres

Miguel Osuna

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leticia Zendejas

Miguel Perez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Leydy Sosa

Miguel Perez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Liangxue Zhu

Miguel Robles

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Liberty Deguzman

Miguel Ruiz Vasquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Liberty Deguzman

Miguel Sanchez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lilia Jacobo

Miguel Vargas Lugo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lilia Sanchez

Miguel Zaragoza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Liliana Alvarez

Mike Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Liliana Meza-Andalon

Mike Vasquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lily Gonzalez

Mikenya Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lina Nguyen

Milagro Ramirez Barrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Linda Chavez

Milandra Guzman Nunez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Linda Freeman

Mingho Chen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Linda Huynh

Minh Do

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Linda Villa

Minh Gian

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Linh Ho

Minh Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Linh Lai

Minh Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lionel Cabrales

Minh Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lionel Sustiguer

Minh Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lisa Chau

Minh-Kha Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lisa Contreras

Minhhang Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lisa Gil

Mirella Ruiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lisa Hoang

Mireya Guzman

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lisa Vu

Miriam Ramirez Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Liselle Ventura

Miriam Stone

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lissette Gomezfernandez

Mirza Baig

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Litzi Lemus

Misael Moralesvicente

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lizet Ortega

Mitchell Kanagaki

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lizeth Solorzano Chavez

Mohammed Ahmed

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lizett Cardenas

Mohan Maturi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lizette Gonzalez Jarquin

Moises Vargas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lizzette Montoya Hernandez

Monica Aguirre

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Loan Tran

Monica Flores

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Long Ly

Monica Gonzales

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lorena Villanueva De Salazar

Monica Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lorena Villanueva De Salazar

Monica Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lorenza Cortez

Monique Bustos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lorenzo Briseno

Moon Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lorenzo Pedraza

Moses Samarron

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lormuy Vong

Moses Tinajero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lorraine Doan

Mrinal Mathur

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Louise Auerhahn

Mudesir Suleyman

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lovelynn Santos

Mudit Bhushan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lucerito Arango

Mulwgeta Gabrielhuit

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lucia Cortes

Muneca Nogami

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lucia Martinez

My Luu

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luciano Guereca

My Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lucila Donoso

My Phuong Huynh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lucina Alvarez

Myles Scott

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ludwika Bazan

Myphuong Juliette Trinh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Alcaraz

Myphuong Trinh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Barajas

Mythanh Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Castro

Myung Choi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Chavez

Nagarathna Kondajji

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Esparza

Nagarathna Kondajji

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Garcialopez

Nairut Shankar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Gonzalez

Nam Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Hernandez

Namrata Garach

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Hernandez

Nancy Calderon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Marquezevaristo

Nancy Maldonado

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Mendoza

Nancy Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Ramon Lopez Silva

Nancy Shumway

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Romero

Nandan Jhaveri

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis T

Naomi Islas-Lozano

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Torres

Naomi Islas-Lozano

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Vera

Narinderpal Singh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luis Vera

Nassim Nouri

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luisa Uribe

Natacha Andrade

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lung Duong

Natalie Mendoza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lupita Alvarez

Nathalia Montanoolguin

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luz Cardonaaguirre

Nathalie Rojas-Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luz Frias

Nathaniel Bautista

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luz Gabino Cortes Rojas

Nathaniel Gaeta

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Luz Garcia

Nathaniel Gaeta

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ly Tran

Nathaniel Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lydia Reyes

Nayely Verduzco Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Lynette Murillo

Neil Park-Mcclintick

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ma De La Palafox

Nela Babomian

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ma Teresa Vital De Cruz

Nestly Yap

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maanarochelle Bulaoro

Ngoc Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maaza Yemane

Ngoc Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Madanbabu Shastri

Nguyen Doan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Madelayne Quintero

Nguyen Ly

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Madelayne Quintero

Nguyen Phan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Madeleine Yamamoto

Nham Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Madeline Perez

Nhi Dinh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Madhu Kusumakar

Nhung Truong

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Magally Zamora

Nicholas Cunanan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Magda Cruz

Nicholas Palka

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Magdalena Amaya

Nick Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Mahesh Karoshi

Nickell Melo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Mahesh Nagarajaiah

Nicky Carrillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Mahshid Elliott

Nicolas Aranda

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Mahua Mal

Nicolas Drygas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Mai Nguyen

Nicolas Plancarte

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maleah Rivera

Nicolas Plancarte

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maleny Sanchez Rios

Nicolas Valles

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Malik Elmore

Nicole Silva

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Man Lu

Nidhi Gupta

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Manas Pati

Nikil Nambiar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Mandeep Singh

Nina Gomez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Mandeep Singh

Nirali Matalia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Manel Gomez

Nirandone Ouaneoudone

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maninderajit Nijjar

Nishant Mistry

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Manuel Cabrera

Nitin Yadav

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Manuel Estrada

Noe Diaz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Manuel Ortiz

Noe Diaz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Manuel Ruiz Coello

Noe Zendejas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Manuela Jimenez

Noel Medina

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marcela Martinez

Noemi Ortiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marcelina Ruiz

Noemy Gonzalez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marcelo Quiambao

Nora Gomez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marco Aguila

Nora Ricocastillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marco Arellanogonzalez

Norma Villalobos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marco Erano Datuin

Obdulio Madrigal Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marcos Gonzalez

Obed Muzquiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marcos Saldana-Martinez

Ocario Gudino

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Marcus Boone

Odorico Roldan Gallegos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Margaret Garcia

Ofelia Alvarado

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Margarette Vo

Ofelia Jimenez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Margarita Arciga

Olga Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Margarita Delatorre

Olimpia Orellana

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Margarita Gutierrez

Olivia Cavada

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Aguilar

Olivia Estevezpolanco

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Aguilera Perez

Olivia Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Alvirde

Olivia Gomez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Alvirde

Olivia Miranda

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Arandasilva

Om Sanghvi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Arciniega

Omar Montenegro

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Avila

Omar Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Bolanos

Omar Soliz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Cabreraespitia

Omar Vazquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Carrilloecheverria

Onias Millan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Cortes

Ophelia Zendejas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Cortes

Ora Folden

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Elena Millan De Salgado

Oscar Figueroa

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Elizondo-Villa

Oscar Guerra

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Escobar

Oscar Jaimes

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Floresderamirez

Oscar Maldonado

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Gonzalez

Oscar Torres Olazaba

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Gonzalez

Oswald Herrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Magallon

Oswaldo Arauzo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Martinez

Otilia Llamas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Mendez

Pablo Martinez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Munoz

Paige Vasquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Pena

Pamela Campos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Pena

Parul Angrish

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Perales

Patricia Anaya

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Perez

Patricia Cruz Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Perez Diaz

Patricia Tapiarico

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Pimentel

Patricia Tapiarico

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Pimentel Covarrubias

Patrick Doan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Pinade Castaneda

Patrick Viruel

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Prieto Solis

Paul Chen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Quinozacabrera

Paul Gordillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Quiroz

Paul Nieto

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Rodriguez

Paul Renteria

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Rodriguez

Paul Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Rodriguez

Paul Truong

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Rojo

Paul Vong

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Romero

Paula Angarica

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Salazargutierrez

Paulina Rea

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Sanchez

Pauline Torres

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Sanchez

Paulino Herrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Saucedo

Paulino Herrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Solis

Pawanjot Singh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Maria Tiscareno

Pedro Carrillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pedro Chavez

Stargeena Usita

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pedro Gomezpelcastre

Stefani Cardenas Varela

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pedro Robles Torres

Stefano Rivellini

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pedro Rodriguezsalinas

Stella Nwoye

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Peijun Wong

Stephanie Aliaga

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Penli Yu

Stephanie Contreras

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pennamma Kuruvilla

Stephanie Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Perla Arellano

Stephanie Gil

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Perla Orenday

Stephanie Kraemer

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Peter Lin

Stephanie Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Peter Morales Garcia

Stephanie Salas Mora

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Petra Gonzales

Stephanie Velazquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pha Mai

Steve Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Philip Tai

Steven Bao

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Phillip Lopez

Steven Cazares Macedo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Phu Le

Steven Cheng

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Phu Luong

Steven Estrada

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Phu Nguyen

Steven Guillen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Phuc Le

Subash Sudireddy

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Phuoc Thang

Subir Basu

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Phuoc Trinh

Sujith Pakala

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Phuong Bui

Sukhdev Dhanota

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pingping Wang

Sukhpreet B

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pinky Saini

Sukhpreet Bhinder

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Placido Delacruz

Suman Kaur

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Polo Pedroza

Suman Kaushik

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Porfirio Frias Navarro

Sumod Giri

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pradeep Das

Surey Munozrichardson

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Prakash Kaligotla

Surinder Moor

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Prathamesh Prem Sankar

Surjeet Singh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Pricila Vitela

Surjeet Singh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Princess Jessica Mariano

Susana Orozco

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Priscilla Guzman

Susanna Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Priscilla Rodriguez

Suzanna Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Priscilla Toral-Ayar

Sweetie Chudasama

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Priya Vangani

Sy Coong

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Priyadarsini Devanand

Sylvia Cardenas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quang Ly

Tae Hyun

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quang Tran

Taebaek Baik

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quang Tran

Taejinn Hahn

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quintin White

Tai Phan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quoc Pham

Tajender Singh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quocsi Le

Talisa Gates

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quy Huynh

Tam Ho

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quyen Nguyen

Tam Luong

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Quynhdan Tran

Tam Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rachel Garcia

Tam Nguyen-Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rachel Wuerstlin

Tamika Walker

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rachhpal Kaur

Tan Huynh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Radhika Muvva

Tan Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rafael Guadalupe Rodriguez Ramirez

Tandeep Sodhi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rafael Perez

Tandeep Sodhi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rafael Tiradocastaneda

Tania Ornelasgutierrez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raghavendra Gangavathivaradaraj

Tania Peguero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raimati Kumar

Tanny Tani

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raj Dhaliwal

Tanvi Mathur

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rajamani Kinard

Tarrell Smith

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rajivkumar Gandhi

Tatiana Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ralph Camacho

Tedros Ghebremeskel

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ramanjit Padda

Tejinder Mangat

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ramiro Diaz

Telesforo Estudillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ramiro Diaz

Teresa Aguilar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ramiro Villarruel

Teresa Benavidez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ramon Arreola

Teresa Mancilla

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ramon Hernandez

Teresa Price

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ramona Cordova

Teresa Ruiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Randy Flores

Teresa Villaneda De Flores

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Randy Mai

Teresita Sustaita

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ranjit Singh

Terez Dennis

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raquel Magdaleno

Terry Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raquel Montantes

Thai Quach

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raul Aldaz

Thanh Lieu

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raul Bustamante Izguerra

Thanh Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raul Garciascon

Thanh Nguyenperez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raul Macias

Thanh Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raul Rios

Thanh Phan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rayjordan Villanueva

Thanh Phan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rayleen Chavira

Thanh Tat

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Raymond Cerezo

Thanh Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rebeca Armendariz

Thanhlan Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rebeca Esquivias Morales

Thao Ngo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rebecca Gil

Thao Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rebekah Jensen

Thavy Yun

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Reginald Swilley

Thelma Valadezvaladez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rene Campos

Theodore Reid

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rene Ruiz

Theodore Reid

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Renee Manuel-Arias

Theresa Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Reverdia Jones

Thi Loan Doan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rey Ramos

Thi Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Reyes Mejia

Thi Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Reyna Jimenez

Thien Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Reyna Magallon

Thihoa Inhi Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Reyna Villa

Tho Vi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ricardo Cortes

Thomas Bui

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ricardo Cortes

Thomas Quinonez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ricardo Mora

Thomas Wong

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ricardo Pena

Thong Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ricardo Trevino

Thong Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Richard Delgado

Thu Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Richard Mendez

Thu Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Richard Rivas

Thu Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Richard Sanchez

Thu Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Richard Sotelo

Thuan Yamamoto

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rick Rodriguez

Thuy Huynh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ricky Lam

Thuy Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rico Carandang

Thuy Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rigoberto Maldonado

Thuyan Ngo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rinku

Thuytrina Ho

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rita Chen

Tien Dan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rita Villa

Tien Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rithik Goli

Tien Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rizel Dumon

Tienminhthuy Huynh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Robert Altekruise

Tim Oyao

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Robert Candelaria

Timothy Chang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Robert Gamble

Timothy Vo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Robert Gutierrez

Tina Quan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Robert Ramirez

Tinh Thanh

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Robert Romero

Toan Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Robert Sanchez

Tomasa Araujocontreras

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Robert Wong

Tomasa Araujocontreras

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Alvarez Villalba

Tommy Bang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Coronado

Tommy Bui

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Eugino

Tommy Ho

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Flores

Tommy Meza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Lopez Espinoza

Toni Lacerda

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Lopez Espinoza

Torie Ngo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Mendoza

Tracy Gomez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Molina

Tracy Israde Torres

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roberto Moreno

Tran Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rocio Carriedo

Trang Phan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rocio Vazquezdelgado

Tri Vo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rodney Lizama

Trini Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rodolfo Molinaramirez

Tripat Deol

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rodolfo Paredes

Trung Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rodolfo Paredes

Trung Vo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rodolfo Romo

Tsehay Haile

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rodrigo Escobar

Tu Hoang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rogan Luo

Tu Ly

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rogelio Campos

Tuan Bui

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rogelio Hernandez Romero

Tuan Ho

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rogelio Ramos

Tuan Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rogue Acosta

Tung Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rolando Marante

Tuoi Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rolando Medinadelrio

Tuong Ho

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Romanjoseph Rodriguez

Tuong Hoang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Romelia Mcgraw

Tuyen Che

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Romeo Travis

Tyler Miltenberger

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Romieross Adriano

Tyler Vu

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Romina Perez

Tyrone Bougere

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ronald Johnson

Ulysses Alvaradonegrete

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ronald Pham

Umesh Batra

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roopashree Deshpande

Uriel Mozobarrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosa Cisneros

Uriel Mozobarrera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosa Guillen

Uriel Perez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosa Lopezdeesquivel

Uriel Rivero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosa Ponce Cardoso

Uriel Vargas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosa Sanchez

Usha Srikumaran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosa Sanchez

Uyen Khuu

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosa Tisnado

Valentin Rosas Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosa Totolopez

Valentin Rosas Lopez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosalba Hernandezarmenta

Valentina Lopez Sanchez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosalia Zavala Juarez

Valeria Rodriguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosalva Duran

Valeriano Nad

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosanna Altamirano

Van Gip

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roseashley De Guzman

Vandana Nambiar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roselynn Pham

Vanessa Bautista

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosendo Tafolla

Vanessa Bautista

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rosvías De La Cruz

Vanessa Castillo-Manzano

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roxana Casillascolin

Vanna Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roxana Duran Serrano

Varuna Ravi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roxann Powers

Vasantha Natarajan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Roy Deluna

Vasantha Natarajan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ruben Guardado

Vaughn David Balanon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ruben Guizar

Veera Danturthi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ruben Valencia

Venkata Sai Aditya Gollakota

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ruby Herrera

Venu Atthuluri

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ruby Herrera

Veronica Balderrama

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rucha Kulkarni

Veronica Garcia

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rucha Kulkarni

Veronica Llamas Gutierrez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rudolph Martinez

Veronica Martinez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Rula Sai

Veronica Mendoza

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ruth Figueroa

Vi Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ruth Perez

Vi Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ryan Chi

Vi-Vivian Nguyen-La

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ryan Dang

Vianey Martinez Torres

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ryan Myers

Vianey Padilla

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ryan Nguyen

Vic Delacruz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ryan Sepulveda

Vicente Rico

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ryan Shing

Vicente Velazquez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Ryan Ton

Victor Artiaga

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sabrina Gonzales

Victor Gonzalez Mendez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sabrina Gonzalez

Victor Huesca

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sabrina Martinez

Victor Macias Menchaca

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sabrina Prasad

Victor Martinez-Romero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sabrina Sanchez

Victor Romero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sachin Kumar

Victor Vargasduarte

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sahil Kamboj

Victoria Johnston

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sahirab Sandhu

Victoria Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sailaja Praharaju

Victoria Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Saloshni Chand

Victoria Schroeder

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Salvador Aguilera

Victoria Vyedina

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Salvador Barrios

Vidya Sankarram

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Salvador De Dios Velasco

Viet Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Salvador Delriotorres

Viet Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Salvador Rios

Vigneshkumar Muruganantham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Salvador Tamayo

Vijay Saini

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sam Curcio

Vikas Saini

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Samantha Ramirez

Viktoria Urrea

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Samara Covarrubiascorona

Vincent Cantelmo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Samarie Hernandez

Vincent Cantelmo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sameer Shah

Vincent Delgadillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sami Bogale

Vincent Guerrero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sami Sweidan

Vinh Hoang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Samuel Aguayo

Vinh Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandra Alcaraz

Vinh Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandra Alcaraz

Vinh Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandra Chavarria

Violeta Bernardino

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandra Gonzalez

Vipin Jose

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandra Madrigal

Virgilio Barrientos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandra Moncadadelopez

Virginia Barbadillo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandra Munoz

Virginio Dominguez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandy Guerra

Viridiana Reynoso

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandy Hoang

Visal Leng

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sandy Perry

Vivek Malhotra

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sang Dang

Vivian Do

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sanh Le

Vivian Du

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Santhana Satagopan

Vivian Huang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Santos Andazola

Vivian Tran

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Santos Andazola

Vivian Vuong

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sara Adhanom

Vivica Gonzales

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sara Rodriguez Canales

Vu Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sarahy Chavez

Vu Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Saul Gonzalez

Vu Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Saul Miranda

Vu Thai

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Savanna Vu

Vy Vo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Scott Chi

Vyanh Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Scott Chi

Wan-Chieh Pai

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Scott Kao

Wan-Chieh Pai

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sean Nguyen

Wei Wu

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sean Nguyen

Wei Xiaozhi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sebastian De La Riva

Wei Zhang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sebastian Mendoza

Wenafe Nacar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sebastian Parra

Wenceslao Toscano

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Selina Rivero

Wendy Gil

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sentayehu Beriye

Wilbur Juni

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Serafin Villaseñor

William Booker

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Serenity Vann

William Ho

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sergio Cois

William Johnson

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sergio Conriquez

William Pham

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sergio Zepeda

William Phan

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Servando Perezvelasco

Willie Barnes

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shadey Arias

Wilmer Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shammah Martin

Winston Vilorio

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shanetriet Nguyen

Wookyung Kwon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shanezza Avila

Xavier Truong

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shangpin Chang

Xavier Urban

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shawn Mariucci

Xingquan Lin

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shawn Nguyen

Xuantam Nguyen

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shawn Nguyen

Yadira Suarez Pinzon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shelly Bansal

Yadira Suarez Pinzon

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shimeng Zhou

Yan Gutzman

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shirisha Arolla

Yan Sun

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shirisha Arolla

Yaneth Alcaraz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shivani Kota

Yanira Valenzuela

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shobhan Lakkapragada

Yasmeen Ramos

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shravanthi Arramreddy

Yen Le

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shrayes Upadhyayula

Yeni Romero

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shreyas Vaid

Yeny Lopezdiaz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shria Tomlinson

Yeonjun Kim

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shrinivasan Jaganathan

Yesenia Flores

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shuhong Li

Yesenia Jorge

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Shuo Sun

Yesenia Lombera

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Siclali Velazquez-Quintero

Yesenia Marentes Romo

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sideo Singh

Yesenia Ortiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sigfredo Alvaradocarranza

Yesenia Ortiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Silvia Enriquez

Yesica Barajas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Silvia Hernandez

Yeudiel Orozco Orozco

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sindy Yip

Yi Sun

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sinwook Shin

Yilun Lin

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sirlancealot Alvares

Yiming Lin

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sisay Ambaye

Yinming Cheung

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Soe Lwin

Yixin Huang

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sondra Bazzoti

Yoana Salazar

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sonia Atayde

Yolanda Ortiz

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sonia Bhullar

Yolanda Silva

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sonia Escalera

Yong Park

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sonia Espinoza

Young Chung

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sonia Espinoza

Young Yi

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sopheha Heng

Younghoon Kim

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sophia Palmerin Ortiz

Yumika Nguyen-Ochoa

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sophia Rosaline Rodriguez

Yuri Rosas

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Soraya Ghaysarian

Yuriria Poncepadilla

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sowjanya Dixit

Yusuf Amer

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Spencer Thomas

Yusuf Bangura

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sravya Pathi

Yvette Cruz Ramirez

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Sreepada Hegade

Zelalem Wayessa

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Stacie Biscaino

Zhanchong Li

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Stacy Infantino

Zhane Schroeder

It's Time for Fair Work in Fast Food

We, the undersigned, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San José's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers — who are disproportionately women and people of color — often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San José can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

- Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.
- Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to earn one hour of paid time off for every 30 hours worked, offering a well-deserved break.

The majority of fast food workers in San José, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, lack of paid sick leave, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Law can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training and Paid Time Off, San José has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San José's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Signed by:

Stacy Flores

Zhehao Yu

March 19, 2024

Mayor Matt Mahan and Councilmembers
18th Floor, San Jose City Hall
200 E. Santa Clara Street
San Jose, Ca 95113

RE: The Mayor's March Budget Message

Dear Mayor and Council:

We, the undersigned organizations, call upon the San José City Council to uphold worker safety and well-being by endorsing the creation of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance as a top priority in this year's budget discussions.

San Jose's fast food industry, employing nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's labor force and economy. In California, eight out of every ten fast-food workers come from diverse backgrounds, and seven out of ten are women. They play a crucial role in serving meals to tens of thousands of people and driving the profits of the billion-dollar fast-food sector. However, frontline fast-food workers often grapple with job instability and unsafe working conditions.

San Jose can and must lead the way in empowering fast food workers to address these problems. The Fast Food Fair Work Law presents an opportunity to revolutionize this industry so that fast food workers enjoy the same rights, benefits and opportunities as other working people in our region. Here's what it will provide:

Know Your Rights Training: The law will mandate annual "Know Your Rights" training for fast-food workers, addressing issues such as wage theft and sexual harassment, providing tools to stop abuses, and compensating workers for their time spent in training.

Paid Time Off: Recognizing fast-food workers as parents, caregivers, and individuals with personal needs, the law allows them to access paid time off, offering a well-deserved break.

San Jose's fast food industry, boasting nearly 13,000 cooks and cashiers, is a vital contributor to the city's workforce and economy — and the vast majority of these frontline workers are women and people of color. However, the majority of these frontline workers, eight in ten of whom are workers of color and seven in ten are women, grapple with significant challenges such as unstable jobs, unsafe working conditions, and inadequate wages. Despite the industry's billion-dollar profits, cooks and cashiers endure erratic hours, wage theft, sexual harassment, and other pervasive workplace issues. The lack of predictable schedules adds pressure on workers and contributes to housing instability, affecting 1 in 9 unhoused California workers employed in fast food.

We firmly believe that the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance can be a transformative force. By guaranteeing workers Know Your Rights Training, Safe and Secure Workplaces, and Paid Time Off, San Jose has the opportunity to lead in empowering fast food workers and improving their lives, alongside their families, customers, and communities.

We envision a city where everyone, irrespective of their occupation, has access to basic labor rights and the information needed to be empowered on the job. We, the undersigned, support the Fast Food Fair Work Law and strongly urge the San José City Council to prioritize the creation of this critical legislation in this year's budget discussions, affirming San Jose's commitment to fair treatment, security, and dignity for fast food workers, thereby creating a positive impact on the lives of thousands of workers and the broader community.

Sincerely,

Amigos de Guadalupe Center for Justice and Empowerment

Second Harvest of Silicon Valley

Latinos United for a New America

Law Foundation of Silicon Valley

Black Leadership Kitchen Cabinet

San Jose/Silicon Valley NAACP

Asian Law Alliance

CARAS

March 19, 2024

Mayor Matt Mahan and Councilmembers
18th Floor, San Jose City Hall
200 E. Santa Clara Street
San Jose, CA 95113

Dear Mayor Mahan and Councilmembers,

We represent over 100,000 working people across San Jose and Santa Clara County. We stand with our members in urging your support to allocate one time funding for staff work needed to develop a Fast Food Fair Work ordinance as part of the City of San Jose's FY 2024-2025 budget.

San Jose is home to 13,000 fast food cooks, cashiers and baristas, the majority of whom are women, immigrants and people of color. These workers have driven double-digit increases in the operating profits of global companies like McDonald's, Starbucks, Burger King and others. They are an integral part of our City's economic engine.

Despite their industry's success, fast food workers face precarious economic conditions. One in nine homeless workers in the state are employed in the fast food sector – more than any other industry. And too many face rampant abuses in their workplaces.

Eighty-five percent of fast food workers report having experienced wage theft. In San Jose, workers have rung the alarm over sexual harassment and health and safety hazards—from septic flooding and rats, to extreme heat, and violence at their workplaces—which also impact customer safety. Workers are routinely denied access to their sick days, forcing them to work sick. When they try to assert their rights, they often face illegal retaliation. Although we have laws designed to protect workers, far too few understand their rights at work and how to enforce them. A new study finds that 93 percent of these workers do not understand their rights and protections on the job or how to access public programs.

San Jose has the opportunity to address this knowledge gap and improve compliance among fast food employers in the FY24-25 budget. We support allocating one time funding for staff time to develop a Fast Food Fair Work ordinance to provide mandatory know-your-rights training annually, so that fast food workers can learn about their rights, protections and public benefits available to them. The ordinance should also give fast food workers paid time off to attend the training and the opportunity to earn further paid time off.

Our city is at the heart of Silicon Valley's innovation and wealth. However, too many families are being left out of sharing in this prosperity. We trust that you share a vision of San Jose in which all workers, families and business can thrive. We urge your support of the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance.

Sincerely,

Jean Cohen, Executive Officer, South Bay AFL-CIO Labor Council

Maria Noel Fernandez, Executive Director, Working Partnerships USA and First Vice President, South Bay AFL-CIO Labor Council

Riko Mendez, Chief Elected Officer, SEIU Local 521 and President, South Bay AFL-CIO Labor Council

John Tucker, Representative, AFSCME MEF Local 101

FW: March Budget Message - Comment to Item 3.3

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 12:36 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

📎 1 attachments (160 KB)

DM_MahanBudget_LetterofSupport_031924.docx.pdf;

From: Elizabeth Funk <[REDACTED]>
Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 11:54 AM
To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>
Subject: Fwd: March Budget Message - Comment to Item 3.3

[External Email]

You don't often get email from [REDACTED] learn why this is important

Hello,

Please find attached a comment to item 3.3 regarding Mayor Mahan's Budget Message.

Thank you for your consideration.

--

Elizabeth Funk
Founder and CEO
DignityMoves
[REDACTED]

Let's stay connected!

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

March 19, 2023

To the Honorable Members of the City Council of San Jose:

I am writing to express my support for Mayor Matt Mahan's March Budget Message, specifically as relates to investing in interim housing solutions for individuals experiencing unsheltered homelessness.

Mayor Mahan's budget message states that for "moral, fiscal and environmental reasons" substantial investments are needed to provide alternatives for people languishing on our streets. As permanent housing costs so much, and only limited (and often undesirable) shelter is available, the net result is people falling deeper into chronic homelessness. The more trauma they endure, the more likely they are to develop substance use or behavioral health issues. Unsheltered homelessness needlessly costs hundreds of lives in San Jose alone each year. While investing in interim housing seems expensive in a time of constricting budgets, the status quo is even more expensive and fiscally unsustainable.. Leaving people in unmanaged conditions costs 2-3x more than providing dignified interim housing and supportive services. That's a remarkable return on investment. If even a fraction of those people return to being taxpayers the return is many multiples.

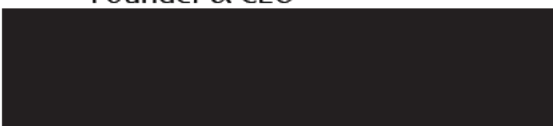

Financial costs also add up quickly: police and fire services, emergency room visits, environmental damage. A 2015 study in Santa Clara County found that "the top five percent of unhoused individuals who consume the most public resources account for almost half (47%) of all expenditures." On average, each individual costs $65,000 per year with highest users over 100,000. These amounts far exceed the investment required to provide a dignified space and supportive services for our neighbors.

On behalf of DignityMoves I hope that you will support the passage of Mayor Mahan's budget message. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth Funk
Founder & CEO

FW: I support the Mayor's Budget Message

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 12:36 PM

To: Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

 1 attachments (407 KB)

Mike.Kraus.PNA.Biz.Card.pdf;

From: Mike Kraus <[REDACTED]>
Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 12:12 PM
To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>
Subject: I support the Mayor's Budget Message

[External Email]

You don't often get email from [REDACTED] Learn why this is important

Dear Councilmember David Cohen,

My name is Michael Kraus, and I am a resident of District 4. I live in the Penitencia neighborhood and am very concerned about homelessness. I constantly get feed back from the Penitencia Neighborhood residents and all of them are concerned with the homeless issue and the spreading of homeless camps.

As my representative, I am asking you to support the Mayor's Budget Message, which will help us get people indoors faster. Please vote to pass the message on March 19th.

Thank you for representing my voice at City Hall,

Mike Kraus
President-Penitencia Neighborhood Association

Web Page: www.Penitenciaassociation.com

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: San Jose City Council 3/19/2024

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:17 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: Debra Townley [REDACTED]
Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 1:28 PM
To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>
Subject: San Jose City Council 3/19/2024

[External Email]

You don't often get email from [REDACTED] learn why this is important

Dear Honorable Mayor and Ciry Council Members,

I am in full agreement with the letter from and endorsed by:

Sandy Perry, Vice President of the Board
Josefina Aguilar, Executive Director
South Bay Community Land Trust

Endorsed by:

Maritza Maldonado, Founding Executive Director
Amigos de Guadalupe Center for Justice and Empowerment

Socorro Montaño, Co-Director, Organizing Coordinator
Tony Romero, Co-Director, Community Organizer
Latinos Unidos por una Nueva America (LUNA)

Andrea Portillo, Director of Community Impact and Policy
SOMOS MayfairSandy Perry, Vice President of the Board

Josefina Aguilar, Executive Director
South Bay Community Land Trust

Endorsed by:

Maritza Maldonado, Founding Executive Director

Amigos de Guadalupe Center for Justice and Empowerment

Socorro Montañó, Co-Director, Organizing Coordinator

Tony Romero, Co-Director, Community Organizer

Latinos Unidos por una Nueva America (LUNA)

Andrea Portillo, Director of Community Impact and Policy

SOMOS Mayfair

Thank you!

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Public comment for City Council March 19, item no: 3.3, Fast Food Worker Ordinance

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:14 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: Victor Costa [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 1:58 PM

To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Subject: Re: Public comment for City Council March 19, item no: 3.3, Fast Food Worker Ordinance

[External Email]

San Jose City Clerk Toni Taber,

I hope this message finds you well. As a worker deeply invested in our city's well-being and fairness, I urge you to vote in favor of adding one time funding to the City's budget to study developing a Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance during the upcoming council meeting on March 19, 2024.

In San José alone, nearly 13,000 frontline fast food workers face job instability, unsafe working conditions, and unpredictable schedules. These challenges disproportionately affect women and people of color. A staggering 85% of fast food workers in California suffer from wage theft, and 1 in 9 unhoused workers in the state are employed in fast food, leading to housing instability or even homelessness.

Despite these challenges, a recent report by the Step Forward Foundation revealed that 88% of California fast food workers lack knowledge about their rights and essential benefits. The Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance aims to address labor violations by providing training to workers and offering paid time off to sustain their families.

However, the fast food industry has lobbied against this ordinance, claiming it would harm small, locally-owned businesses and the local economy. Yet, the law's applicability to companies with over 30 establishments indicates they are not the small establishments they claim to be but rather big corporate enterprises, many with a history of labor violations. Good businesses should welcome their employees' awareness of their rights, but many of these companies have profited at their workers' expense. Their fear stems from the threat posed by informed workers to their exploitative business models.

The Fast Food Industry's race-to-the-bottom model and poor working conditions have ripple effects across communities, contributing to public health impacts, wage theft, and housing instability and homelessness — and the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance can be a critical part of our city's goals to combat these issues.

I trust you will make the right decision for our community.

Victor Costa
[REDACTED]

Turlock, California 95382

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Public comment for City Council March 19, item no: 3.3, Fast Food Worker Ordinance

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:15 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: Domingo Armendariz [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 1:56 PM

To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Subject: Re: Public comment for City Council March 19, item no: 3.3, Fast Food Worker Ordinance

[External Email]

San Jose City Clerk Toni Taber,

I hope this message finds you well. As a resident deeply invested in our city's well-being and fairness, I urge you to vote in favor of adding one time funding to the City's budget to study developing a Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance during the upcoming council meeting on March 19, 2024.

In San José alone, nearly 13,000 frontline fast food workers face job instability, unsafe working conditions, and unpredictable schedules. These challenges disproportionately affect women and people of color. A staggering 85% of fast food workers in California suffer from wage theft, and 1 in 9 unhoused workers in the state are employed in fast food, leading to housing instability or even homelessness.

Despite these challenges, a recent report by the Step Forward Foundation revealed that 88% of California fast food workers lack knowledge about their rights and essential benefits. The Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance aims to address labor violations by providing training to workers and offering paid time off to sustain their families.

However, the fast food industry has lobbied against this ordinance, claiming it would harm small, locally-owned businesses and the local economy. Yet, the law's applicability to companies with over 30 establishments indicates they are not the small establishments they claim to be but rather big corporate enterprises, many with a history of labor violations. Good businesses should welcome their employees' awareness of their rights, but many of these companies have profited at their workers' expense. Their fear stems from the threat posed by informed workers to their exploitative business models.

The Fast Food Industry's race-to-the-bottom model and poor working conditions have ripple effects across communities, contributing to public health impacts, wage theft, and housing instability and homelessness — and the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance can be a critical part of our city's goals to combat these issues.

I trust you will make the right decision for our community.

Domingo Armendariz
[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]
Gilroy, California 95020

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Public comment for City Council March 19, item no: 3.3, Fast Food Worker Ordinance

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:15 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: nsmf13719 [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 1:51 PM

To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Subject: Re: Public comment for City Council March 19, item no: 3.3, Fast Food Worker Ordinance

[External Email]

San Jose City Clerk Toni Taber,

I hope this message finds you well. As a resident deeply invested in our city's well-being and fairness, I urge you to vote in favor of adding one time funding to the City's budget to study developing a Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance during the upcoming council meeting on March 19, 2024.

In San José alone, nearly 13,000 frontline fast food workers face job instability, unsafe working conditions, and unpredictable schedules. These challenges disproportionately affect women and people of color. A staggering 85% of fast food workers in California suffer from wage theft, and 1 in 9 unhoused workers in the state are employed in fast food, leading to housing instability or even homelessness.

Despite these challenges, a recent report by the Step Forward Foundation revealed that 88% of California fast food workers lack knowledge about their rights and essential benefits. The Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance aims to address labor violations by providing training to workers and offering paid time off to sustain their families.

However, the fast food industry has lobbied against this ordinance, claiming it would harm small, locally-owned businesses and the local economy. Yet, the law's applicability to companies with over 30 establishments indicates they are not the small establishments they claim to be but rather big corporate enterprises, many with a history of labor violations. Good businesses should welcome their employees' awareness of their rights, but many of these companies have profited at their workers' expense. Their fear stems from the threat posed by informed workers to their exploitative business models.

The Fast Food Industry's race-to-the-bottom model and poor working conditions have ripple effects across communities, contributing to public health impacts, wage theft, and housing instability and homelessness — and the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance can be a critical part of our city's goals to combat these issues.

I trust you will make the right decision for our community.

[REDACTED]

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Public comment for City Council March 19, item no: 3.3, Fast Food Worker Ordinance

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:15 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: Renata Sanchez <[REDACTED]>

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 12:54 PM

To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Subject: Re: Public comment for City Council March 19, item no: 3.3, Fast Food Worker Ordinance

[External Email]

San Jose City Clerk Toni Taber,

I hope this message finds you well. As a resident deeply invested in our city's well-being and fairness, I urge you to vote in favor of adding one time funding to the City's budget to study developing a Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance during the upcoming council meeting on March 19, 2024.

In San José alone, nearly 13,000 frontline fast food workers face job instability, unsafe working conditions, and unpredictable schedules. These challenges disproportionately affect women and people of color. A staggering 85% of fast food workers in California suffer from wage theft, and 1 in 9 unhoused workers in the state are employed in fast food, leading to housing instability or even homelessness.

Despite these challenges, a recent report by the Step Forward Foundation revealed that 88% of California fast food workers lack knowledge about their rights and essential benefits. The Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance aims to address labor violations by providing training to workers and offering paid time off to sustain their families.

However, the fast food industry has lobbied against this ordinance, claiming it would harm small, locally-owned businesses and the local economy. Yet, the law's applicability to companies with over 30 establishments indicates they are not the small establishments they claim to be but rather big corporate enterprises, many with a history of labor violations. Good businesses should welcome their employees' awareness of their rights, but many of these companies have profited at their workers' expense. Their fear stems from the threat posed by informed workers to their exploitative business models.

The Fast Food Industry's race-to-the-bottom model and poor working conditions have ripple effects across communities, contributing to public health impacts, wage theft, and housing instability and homelessness — and the Fast Food Fair Work Ordinance can be a critical part of our city's goals to combat these issues.

I trust you will make the right decision for our community.

Renata Sanchez
[REDACTED]

[REDACTED]
San Jose, California 95134

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Lisa E Hettler-Smith 95112 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:18 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United <[REDACTED]>

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 1:45 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Lisa E Hettler-Smith 95112 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage

* Socializing and connecting with family and friends

* Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,

Lisa E Hettler-Smith

95112

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Kathy Wilson 95127-1740 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:19 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United <[REDACTED]>

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 12:51 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Kathy Wilson 95127-1740 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

The best park in this area is San Jose's alum rock park – it is used by so many residents and its natural beauty stunning and invigorating. Over the last 40 years our family has used this park for parties and hundreds hikes through the park and the established trails. Most appreciated is the restoration of the hillsides as result of several mud slides this winter. However what is left of the historic landmarks (spring water pavilion, old lights, and covered picnic areas) are fast decaying beyond repair – very sad. Please allocate some funding so that these historic monuments are not lost forever. Thank you so much for this consideration. Kathy wilson

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage
-  Socializing and connecting with family and friends
-  Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,
Kathy Wilson
95127-1740

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:24 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 12:39 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Chris Mildebrandt 95112 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage

* Socializing and connecting with family and friends

* Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,

Chris Mildebrandt

95112

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Gerald Giles 95117 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:24 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 2:10 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Gerald Giles 95117 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage

* Socializing and connecting with family and friends

* Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,
Gerald Giles
95117

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

[REDACTED]
Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: General Public Comment, 3/19 Council Meeting

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:24 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: Chris Copolillo [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 12:40 PM

To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Subject: General Public Comment, 3/19 Council Meeting

[External Email]

You don't often get email from [REDACTED] Learn why this is important

Council members,

This year, as KIPP San Jose Collegiate students brought forward concerns on their safety, our students and staff received exceptional customer service support from the Neighborhood Outreach team. Our students were heard by city staff largely due to members of this team; later two KIPP students were brought on the team as interns, an important developmental experience. As you consider the tradeoffs required to meet the needs of residents in the budget, we hope you will keep this experience in mind.

- Chris Copolillo

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Mike Beggs 95112 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:24 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 2:19 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Mike Beggs 95112 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

I count on green open spaces free of any commercialization to maintain the great lifestyle I enjoy in San Jose.

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage

* Socializing and connecting with family and friends

* Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,
Mike Beggs
95112

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Karen Mason 95125 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 2:56 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United - [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 2:53 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Karen Mason 95125 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage

* Socializing and connecting with family and friends

* Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,
Karen Mason
95125

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Ilesha Bayona 95127 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 3:04 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United <[REDACTED]>

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 3:00 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Ilesha Bayona 95127 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage

* Socializing and connecting with family and friends

* Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,
Ilesha Bayona
95127

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Julie Nano 95112 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 3:18 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 3:14 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Julie Nano 95112 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Park equity should also be a goal. Parks in more affluent neighborhoods have clean park bathrooms with soap and well maintained grounds while parks in lower income neighborhoods have sub-par conditions. We should strive for a unified city with equitable resources.

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance

-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage
-  Socializing and connecting with family and friends
-  Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,
Julie Nano
95112

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 4:06 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 3:55 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Richard Coolman 95125 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities
-  Availability of food and beverage

* Socializing and connecting with family and friends

* Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,

Richard Coolman

95125

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

FW: Please Support the Mayor's Budget Message

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 4:43 PM

To: Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: David Noel [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 4:26 PM

To: City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Subject: Fw: Please Support the Mayor's Budget Message

[External Email]

Hi City Clerk,

I was unable to find my letter below in the consolidated public comment document for the city budget topic on today's city council meeting. Could you please add it for the record?

Thank You, David Noel

----- Forwarded Message -----

From: "David Noel" [REDACTED]

To: "City Clerk" <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>, "Vice Mayor Rosemary Kamei" <district1@sjdistrict1.org>, "district2@sanjoseca.gov" <district2@sanjoseca.gov>, "district3@sanjoseca.gov" <district3@sanjoseca.gov>, "district4@sanjoseca.gov" <district4@sanjoseca.gov>, "district5@sanjoseca.gov" <district5@sanjoseca.gov>, "district6@sanjoseca.gov" <district6@sanjoseca.gov>, "district7@sanjoseca.gov" <district7@sanjoseca.gov>, "district8@sanjoseca.gov" <district8@sanjoseca.gov>, "Office of Councilmember Pam Foley" <district9@sanjoseca.gov>, "district10@sanjoseca.gov" <district10@sanjoseca.gov>

Cc:

Sent: Tue, Mar 19, 2024 at 2:39 AM

Subject: Please Support the Mayor's Budget Message

Honorable Mayor and City Council,

- Please support the Mayor's budget message
- Please hold a study session on the proposed parks ballot measure before authorizing polling

I agree that unsheltered homelessness is our great city's biggest challenge and needs to be treated as the emergency that it truly is. I urge you to fully fund the Mayor's homelessness proposals, and seriously consider emergency measures such as safe sleeping sites and reallocation of Measure E funds as part of the solution.

As you decide on solutions to homelessness, please ask yourself: "Is this proposal better than un-managed encampments along our waterways, freeways, parks, neighborhoods and downtown?", and "what percentage of our homeless population will this proposal help?". We need to do the greatest good for the greatest number of people as quickly as possible, and can't afford to let the perfect be the enemy of the good. It is time for bold action, and testing new ideas.

Regarding the proposed parks ballot measure, I encourage you to request a study session with an opportunity for focused staff discussion and public comment before beginning polling, even if this would delay the ballot measure to a later election.

I did read the entire budget message and generally support all the stated proposals and priorities (with some hesitation on the parks ballot measure). I hope you will too.

Thank you,

David Noel, District 9
President, Erikson Neighborhood Association

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>

Tue 3/19/2024 4:55 PM

To:Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>

From: San Jose United [REDACTED]

Sent: Tuesday, March 19, 2024 4:39 PM

To: District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>; District 10 <District10@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; City Clerk <city.clerk@sanjoseca.gov>; [REDACTED]

Subject: Doris Livezey 95129 - Protect Our Parks: Council Agenda 3/19/24 Item 3.3

[External Email]

Dear Mayor and City Council,

Protect our Parks. Please strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success of a parks ballot measure. Please expand and enhance the proposal for a November 2024 ballot measure to identify the park priorities of San Jose voters and what they would be willing to support. Lastly, please direct staff to explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

We need more parks and we need to save the parks we have. Please vote for more money for maintenance for our parks. A healthy city has healthy parks. Enough cement!!

Our community needs public parks and urban green space, both of which are a basic need that promote physical and mental health. Many parks still require repair and maintenance and staff are needed for either to occur. For example, Alum Rock Park is still undergoing repair. By ensuring parks are well-maintained and their staffing adequately funded, we create an inclusive environment that fosters a sense of belonging and unity in San Jose. I appreciate that the Mayor's March 2024 budget message highlighted, "Our city parks currently face over $450 million in deferred maintenance costs. It's time we let residents decide..." by directing "the City Manager to explore placing a measure on the upcoming November 2024 ballot."

With regard to the Mayor's suggestion of leasing parkland for commercial purposes. It should be noted that the City Charter (Section 1700.1) already allows long-term leases of parkland with prior approval by the electorate. One example is Raging Waters. For some parks in other cities, significant revenue often comes from fees charged on adjacent real estate properties. There may be many ways to address the lack of maintenance funding. Converting public parkland that is currently open to all free of charge into commercial uses that would charge fees or sell goods and services is an equity issue. Not all San Jose residents can afford to spend money at Raging Waters or other commercial uses. In addition, such commercial uses would be extremely likely to be located on natural, undeveloped areas within our park system, thus reducing San Jose residents' access to nature and urban green space.

If the Council decides to move forward with a potential ballot measure, it is critical that the ballot measure allow voters to express a variety of priorities rather than just weigh in on one idea. For example, residents could weigh in on:

-  Safety in parks
-  Connecting with nature
-  Park maintenance
-  Playgrounds and other family friendly amenities

-  Availability of food and beverage
-  Socializing and connecting with family and friends
-  Increasing parkland to help San Jose adapt to climate changes

I ask that any ballot measure strive to identify the priorities of San Jose voters to maximize the likelihood of success. Staff should also explore additional funding mechanisms for park operations and maintenance to improve our Neighborhood Parks.

Protect Our Parks.

Sincerely,
Doris Livezey
95129

You may not use my contact information for any purpose other than to respond to my concern regarding the topic listed above, nor may you share my address with any other organization(s) or individual(s).

--

This mail was sent on behalf of a San Jose resident via San Jose United

Community Working Together

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.

City Council 3/19/2024 - Item 3.3: Mayor's March Budget Message

Dan Holland [REDACTED]

Tue 3/19/2024 9:12 PM

To: Agendadesk <Agendadesk@sanjoseca.gov>; The Office of Mayor Matt Mahan <mayor@sanjoseca.gov>; Mahan, Matt <Matt.Mahan@sanjoseca.gov>; District1 <district1@sanjoseca.gov>; Kamei, Rosemary <Rosemary.Kamei@sanjoseca.gov>; District2 <District2@sanjoseca.gov>; Jimenez, Sergio <sergio.jimenez@sanjoseca.gov>; District3 <district3@sanjoseca.gov>; Torres, Omar <Omar.Torres@sanjoseca.gov>; District4 <District4@sanjoseca.gov>; Cohen, David <David.Cohen@sanjoseca.gov>; District5 <District5@sanjoseca.gov>; Ortiz, Peter <Peter.Ortiz@sanjoseca.gov>; District 6 <district6@sanjoseca.gov>; Davis, Dev <dev.davis@sanjoseca.gov>; District7 <District7@sanjoseca.gov>; Doan, Bien <Bien.Doan@sanjoseca.gov>; District8 <district8@sanjoseca.gov>; Candelas, Domingo <Domingo.Candelas@sanjoseca.gov>; District9 <district9@sanjoseca.gov>

[External Email]

Some people who received this message don't often get email from [REDACTED] Learn why this is important

Dear Honorable Mayor and City Council,

My name is Dan Holland, and I am a San José Arts Advocate. I am writing regarding Item 3.3 on your agenda for today, Tuesday, March 19, 2024: Approval of the Fiscal Year 2024-2025 Mayor's March Budget Message.

Despite existential threats, San José's creative industry continues to be a critical component of our city's economic engine and Downtown's recovery. According to a 2023 Americans for the Arts study, San José's nonprofit arts sector alone generates $292M in annual economic impact, supports over 4,700 jobs for local residents, and contributes $6M in direct local taxes. This financial impact is a tremendous return on the City's modest annual investment in cultural grants that help keep these organizations afloat and city cultural centers maintained.

I appreciate the Mayor's intention in his March Budget Message to explore additional funding opportunities to support arts, culture, and tourism programs and other initiatives to improve the vibrancy and quality of life in San José. However, I have serious concerns with the Mayor's continued reliance on one-time or bridge funding to "fill the gaps."

Of particular concern is the neglect to address a "Private Percent for Art" policy, which has been a City Council priority since 2020. Such a policy could meaningfully improve the city's built environment and generate desperately needed infrastructure for local artists, arts nonprofits, and small businesses that live under constant threat of displacement by large developments. There are many cities in the Bay Area and throughout California which have successfully implemented a Private Percent for Art policy. San José needs to stop dragging its feet on this issue.

Also unaddressed in the Mayor's March Budget Message is the option of allocating a greater portion of Transient Occupancy Tax (TOT) revenue to arts, culture, and tourism programs. During the Council's recent study session on Arts, Destination Marketing, and Destination Events (Feb. 16, 2024), three different TOT funding scenarios were examined, yet none of these are currently being recommended for further examination.

Instead, the Mayor has chosen to focus on only one of the 12 funding options presented at the study session: an admissions fee for San José events. While the potential for revenue generation from such a fee is immediate and measurable, it would effectively create an additional burden for arts patrons and presenters alike. Any such fee would need to be structured to keep the programs provided by arts and cultural organizations accessible to our entire community and anyone visiting San José to experience those programs.

While considering the Mayor's March Budget Message, I call on you to direct OEDCA staff to work with San José Arts Advocates, the local developer community, and other stakeholders to return to the Council with a Private Percent for Art ordinance for your consideration prior to the close of Fiscal Year 2023-24.

Furthermore, I ask that you direct City staff to conduct further financial modeling of a full or partial reallocation of TOT dollars and/or the establishment of a baseline of TOT revenues allocated to the General Fund with the "net new" allocated to arts, destination marketing, and destination events.

In addition to serving as an economic driver, the arts continue to provide equitable, inclusive, and accessible opportunities for learning, leisure, and community building in our city. It is within your power to ensure that our arts industry receives the resources it needs to survive.

Thank you for your service and your consideration.

Regards,

Dan Holland
District 3/San José

--

Dan Holland

Pronouns: he/him (what's this?)

 My working hours may not be your working hours, and your working hours may not be mine. Please do not feel obligated to reply outside of your normal work schedule. I will endeavor to reply to your email as promptly as I am able. **

This message is from outside the City email system. Do not open links or attachments from untrusted sources.